NEW DELHI: ISRO is all set to welcome new year with new launches

Certainly! ISRO's PSLV-C58 mission is a significant launch scheduled to take place at the Satish Dhawan Space Centre in Sriharikota. The mission involves deploying the XPoSat (X-ray Polarimeter Satellite), a pioneering scientific satellite dedicated to studying X-ray emissions from celestial sources through space-based polarization measurements. XPoSat's primary objective revolves around analyzing and understanding the polarization properties of X-rays originating from various celestial sources such as neutron stars, black holes, and active galactic nuclei. This exploration could shed light on fundamental astrophysical phenomena and help unravel mysteries related to these cosmic entities. The choice of an eastward low inclination orbit for XPoSat's deployment has strategic significance. Such an orbit allows for optimal observation windows and coverage of celestial sources over specific regions of the sky, enhancing the satellite's ability to capture X-ray emissions from various astronomical objects. Overall, the XPoSat mission represents ISRO's commitment to advancing scientific exploration in space and expanding our understanding of X-ray emissions from celestial bodies.
